Before You Ask Them to Learn

Verse 1

Before you ask them to listen,
Notice how they arrived—
With echoes in their footsteps
From other days, other lives.
Some carry unfinished stories,
Some carry light from before,
Every child walks in holding
More than they’re ready to show.

Pre-Chorus

Learning doesn’t start in the moment,
It starts where memory meets now.
It starts when the room feels safe enough
To let the body slow down.

Chorus

You don’t teach by pushing harder,
You don’t pull them into line.
You shape the feeling of the moment
So learning can cross time.
Before you ask them to reach,
Before you ask them to try—
You build a space that can hold
Who they’ve been
And who they might become
At the same time.

Verse 2

Some kids learned early to hurry,
Some learned early to hide.
Some learned the world was watching,
Some learned to shrink inside.
But when the tone feels welcoming,
When the air feels kind,
Something softens in the present
And opens a door behind.

Pre-Chorus

Emotion isn’t extra—
It’s how the brain decides
Whether this moment is worth keeping,
Whether it belongs in a life.

Chorus

You don’t teach by pushing harder,
You don’t pull them into line.
You tend the feeling in the room
So growth can take its time.
Before you ask them to reach,
Before you ask them to try—
You make a place that can carry
Their yesterdays
And their tomorrow’s why.

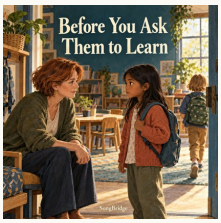

Bridge

Every learner is a bridge
Between what was and what could be.
If the ground beneath them trembles,
The future waits patiently.
Teaching isn’t speeding them forward—
It’s steadying the span
So when they step,
The next version of themselves
Can land.

Final Chorus

You don’t teach alone,
You teach with the field—
With the stories in the room,
With how the moment feels.
Learning doesn’t rush,
It listens, it stays.
When the space can hold the past
The future finds its invited to stay.
You teach by building the place
Where learning can finally say:
Okay.

Outro

Teach the feeling.
Learning will remember.
